ever you go .- Little Corporal. Poor Ponto. One of the most affecting stories I evheard about a dog was told me many years ago by an uncle of mine who once lived in Paris, My uncle was walking on one of the quays, when he saw a man approach, holding a dog by a chain. The poor animal was frightened, and yet did not attempt to struggle as he was being led a long. He looked uppiteously at his jailor, and every now and then tried to fawn about his feet,

"What is going to happen?" inquir ed my uncle.

"Sir, I'm going to drown him; that s what will happen." "But why, sir; are you his master?" "I am certainly his master, and he is old-poor Ponto! I am sorry but it must be." The dog gave a low whine, and trem-bling, crouched close to his master.

"He does not seem very old, and drowning is a hard death," remenstrated my uncle. While he was speaking the words, the man unmoored a little boat, lifted

The man then began to push the dog away with an oar, and at last losing all patience, he struck out so far to deal the dog a blow that he overbalanced himself and fell into the river. He could not swim, and now be-Postage stamps are a comparatively The dog swam to him, and seizing fast recent invention, but they have gone hold of his coat-collar, held him up uninto universal use in most enormous til a boat put off to his rescue and frightened, to the shore-his faithful dog barked, cried and licking his hand and face in the greatest excitement of affection. I remember still the look he stepped forward and asked the man, long as I have a crust, I will give half to my poor Ponto." A woman who had a basket on her arm come up at the time and said, "I should think you would, indeed, or else you ought to be ashamed to look him in the face," and out of her basket took a piece of meat, and the dog was feasted and petted and made much of, and from that time, as long as my uncle staid in Paris, he often saw Ponto on the quay, and the story of his generosity to his master made him so many friends that the dog's keep was no long-
